Marshal Beasieres and Prince Borghese will also send their horses off. When you mention the matter to those officers, you will say that they are accompanying me to the Diet at Frankfort.

l&th, Saint ("loud:

(To the King of Prussia.) Monsieur man Frfrre: I have received your Majesty's letter. The friendly sentiments you express are all the more agreeable to me in that everything that has occurred these last two weeks gave me ground for supposing the contrary. If I am compelled to take up arms to <|efend myself, it will he with the greatest regret that I .shall use them against Your Majesty's troops.

(To the King of Naples.) Prussia is arming in ridiculous fashion: she will, however, noon disarm, or pay dear for it. Nothing could be more foolish and more hesitating than the conduct of the (Prussian) cabinet. The Court of Vienna makes great protestations of friendship, which its extremes weakness makes me believe in. Whatever happens, I can and will face it out. The conscription which 1 have just levied is coming in on all sides; I .shall call up the reserves; I am. thoroughly supplied, and lack nothing, I may possibly take command of the Grand Army in a few days, It numbers about 150,000 men, enough to put down Vienna, Berlin, and St. Petersburg.

The negotiations with England still continue; whether it is peac<* or war will IK* decided within a week. Fox ia altogether out of it, owing to an illness that will probably cany him down to the grave. If I really have to strike once more, Europe will know that I have left Paris only by hearing of the complete dettructioa of my enemiei. It
